AT THE THEATER—The grand comic operatic extravagance, "Fortunio and His Gifted Servants," will be produced to-cight for the first time by the Oates troupe, with a strong cast. The following is the argument: It is a simple story to-eight for the first time by the Oates troupe, with a strong cavt. The following is the argument: It is a simple story of virtue rewarded. Baron Donover, a bankrupt lord, is drafted into the service of King Alfeurite, who is at war with the "Heathen Chines." The Emperor Four-Four being too old to fight and the poor is the name of our interest and give to possible the property of the stript in tribute of our affection. It bears the name of our late beloved rabbl, and we ing norse, new and siegant scire, and nor-nervants, who are so gitted as to be able to accomplish anything and everything desired of them. The fairy prince that changes the name of Myrius to Fortunio, and all set out for the palace of the king. where they are received by his majesty and the Princess Vindicia. The latter at once becomes smitten with Fortunio, but is repuised; and from themceforth her ob-ject is vengeance. She causes Fortunio to be sent to light a dragon. He does it, and heavest the effect of his acceptate is analysed be sent to light a dragon. He does it, and through the gifts of his servants is enabled to kill the mooster. She then causes him to be sent, with the simple escort of his own suite, to meet their most deadly foe, the Emperor Fou-Fou, and takes from him the royal treasure which the latter had in a recent raid captured from the king. Fortunio goes, and again, through the wonderful gifts of the servants, is enabled to attain his orject and defeat the vengeance of Vindlets, whose desire in sending him into such dangers is to have ries over thirty numbers, songs, duets, ries, quariettes, concerted pieces and horuses, selected from such operas as "Martha," 'Lucia," 'Orpheus," 'Troya-ore, "Oberon," "Bohemian Girl," etc.,

The semicration of a beautiful marble monument erected to his honor by the congregated Children of Israel, in the Hebrew Cemetery, on Bass avenue, just outside of the city limits. The day was propitious. The sky was sofily tinted with fleecy clouds, the sir soft and balmy, and everything esemed to favor the successful and happy performance of all the ceremonies that had been designed to mark the imposing event. About 3 o'clock, —Those merchants who have had the taste to cut away the unsightly awnings in front of their stores on Main street have done a good thing. The street has been benefited by the much needed improvement. Most of those awnings that disfigure the fronts on our Memphis Broadway are of no possible use, and are very unsightly besides. Their places could be better supplied by extended Venetian blinds. The beauty of our principal thoroughirare would be greatly enhanced by the entire removal of these very bad awnings. They are positively injurious to the business of the arreet.

Yondar white stone, emblem of innocence it covers, informs the beholder of one who breathed out its bender soul almost in the instant of receiving it, crowned with giory are the conflict began.

There lies a youth, the grief a fond mother and the blasted expectations of an indiciount father. The youth grew up like a well-watered plant; he rose high and bid fair for manhood. But lust as the cedar began to tower and promised ere long to be the pride of the wood and prime among the neighboring trees—alsa the ax was laid on the root, the fatal blow was struck, and all its branching honors tumbled into dust. Left fancy, or do I really hear the passionate mother in an agony of affliction taking her final leave of the darling of her soul? In brothen secents, interrupted by many a sob, I bear her cry: "O Absalom, my son, my only beloved, would to God I had died for thes."

Ask the woman there why she is clad its the garb of sorrow. "Beneath that monument across the entrance resta the companion of my youth, is her mournful answer. In her the lover weeps, the wife mourns, the mother grieves. She heeds not the direction of infinite wisdom to Jeremiah: "Leave thy fatheties while my down trust in me."

But have I come hither to be overcome by the solemnity of my surroundings? Shall I fill the hearts of a living assembly entirely with the awful voices issued forth from the sanctuary, wherein the congregation of the dead are buried? Have you called me hither to turn my entory into an elogy upon the shadows of death?

Why should I bestow my reflective thoughts upon the dry bouse, like Heasitted in his vissurrection morn will ever dawn, whilst the spirit lives forever, souring upward to its source, yet holding communion with the vivid perception of a vivid recollection. In early life, with all our friends around us, hearing their voices, cheered by their smiles, death and the future world are to us misty and remote; but us we advance in our journey upon the rungest road of life, and voice after voice is husened, and form after toom vanishes from our side, our shadow fails almost solitary on the hilade of life, the sond, by the necessity of its being, tends to the unseen and spiritual, and pursues in another life those who it seeks in vain it this. One of the deepest and most imperative cravings of the himsu heart as it follows its beloved ones beyond the veil is for some assurance that they are happier than we. These impressions are the gaies of avect and healing thoughts, which wave over the river of death and make because her without hearts, it is thus that we dedicate this histories as and it is thus, my dear hearers, that we stand upon the grave of our brother without hearts, it is thus that we dedicate this histories and administration. It is the spirit which outlets all; the faculties of the soul which make man immortal, the perfection of moral croelleroy which reveals to him the treasure of eleman immortal, the perfection of moral croelleroy which reveals to him the ireasure of eleman immortal the perfection of moral croelleroy which reveals to him the treasure of over man immortal the visitions of the soul which make man immortal the visitions and brother. Nearly a year has drawn to its close a since you have consigned his body to the silent grave. To day you have witnessed the unveiling of one of the monuments pieced to the honor of his memory. I say one of his monuments for superior to his, more glorious and of greater marit than the pyramides and obelishes of fagure. To day 1, upon whom the mantle of his calling has failen, feel, with the number of his calling has failen, feel, with the prodest satisf

That done, they bid the monument as And cast the deep foundation around the pyre High in the midst they heap the swelling bed Of rising earth, memorial of the dead.

When persons of eminent virtue died, they deposited their ashes in urns, which were lequently adorned with garlands and flowers similar to the one we behold upon the pedestal An urn of gold was brought,

Wrapt in soft purple pails and richly
wrought;
In this the sacred ashes were interred,"

Wrought,
In this the sacred sakes were interred,"
But what a vast difference in the distinction of heads a vast difference in the distinction of heads and the declaration of a monument to the mannes of a beloved and esteemed teacher in israel. There the conclusion of a bicod-marked life, here all peace, love and noble dessign.

This is body ground, for in it sleeps Simon, the righteous, the faithful shepherd of his flock. The motto of Simon Hazadik was also his motto. Upon three things the spiritual welfare of the world does rest—upon the lors, worship and benevolence Tradition toils at inthe temple of Jerusalem, beautiful toils not in the temple of Jerusalem, beautiful the house of God, and restored the dignity of priesthood to its original purity. Like unto him the much-lamented Tusks has done. As a high pries in the lemple of humanity, he were the radiant shield of Urim and Tushin of reason and knowledge upon his faithful breast, which assisted him in his calling and caused him to be one of those who enjoy the glorious privilege to reform the religious if ecclaring and caused him to be one of those who enjoy the mamento of his spirit.

Mazonic corremonies followed, then the strawing of flowers all around the base of the monument by the children, until it is a almost covered. The ceromonies of the evening terminated by an eloquent prayer by the Rabbi Samheld, and then prayer by the Rabbi Samheld, and then be large congregation slowly retired, and left the beautiful monument alone in its clory, with the shadows of fast approaching night gathering around it, just as the fast approaching ahadows of death gather around us all.
